

Beach Wedding - Finding The Right Plus-Size Wedding Dress

Plus-size beach wedding dresses used to be hard to find but as more and more full-figured women are staking their claim to having fun and being unapologetically beautiful, it's no longer a challenge to find a beach wedding dress in a particular style.

1. Material girl
When you're picking a design for a plus-size beach wedding dress, your choice of material is of utmost importance. Choose a beach wedding dress material that is not too thick as to look lifeless. Avoid wearing a plus-size beach wedding dress with an abundant amount of layers and fabric because instead of draping your body, it will blow in all directions in the sea breeze. Heavy fabric with a lot of embellishments will also make you look like you gained a few pounds. Choose materials like silk, chiffon, rayon or lace instead.
2. Flatter or flaunt?
There may be some areas of your body that you might want to downplay and some parts that you want to show off. Say for example, you have shapely legs but are not too confident about your upper arms, you can always choose a plus-size beach wedding dress that will reveal your great gams but minimize your arms. Choose a beach wedding that will compliment your figure, reveal your nice curves but don't give away too much. Mystery, despite what media has been showing you for the past few years, is still a lot sexier than too much visual information.
3. Mind your shoulders

It's important for the bride to look stunning on her wedding day, that is why you'll have to put a lot of considerations on how your wedding dress will be cut.

If you can pull it off, try going bare-shouldered and wear a lovely strapless beach wedding gown instead. Or why not try a plus-size beach wedding dress with spaghetti straps or a halter? If you have heavy arms, use off-the-shoulder styles with lace sleeves or transparent chiffon. If you want an elegant look, you can also use a wrap to wear around your arms or over your shoulders when the temperatures drop. It's a gorgeous way to frame your torso and can also give you enough protection.
